PRIME · Land it. Negotiate it. Own it.

The questions you can see coming — which is most of them. Standard questions with what they're really asking, competency questions mapped to what's being scored, and sharp questions to ask back.

Standard questions — and what they're really asking

Question	What they're really asking
Tell me about yourself.	Your elevator pitch, adapted to this role. Two minutes maximum.
What is your greatest strength?	One strength, directly relevant to the role, proven with a STAR example.
What is your greatest weakness?	A real one — plus the concrete steps you're taking to manage it.
Why do you want to work for us?	Your research speaking: their direction, your fit, specific reasons.
Tell me about a challenge you overcame.	Pure STAR territory — pick a story with a measurable result.
Where do you see yourself in 5 years?	Ambitious but credible growth in a direction this role makes possible.
Why should we hire you?	Your value proposition: skills + proof + what you'll deliver for them.
What do you know about our company?	Tests preparation. Products, recent news, values — and a view on them.
How do you handle stress and deadlines?	Give your system, then a STAR example of it working under pressure.
What's your preferred work style?	Honest answer that maps to what you learned about their culture.

Competency questions — prepare one STAR story each

These usually open with "Give an example of a time..." or "Describe a situation where..."

Curveballs and pressure questions

- The unexpected question: pause, think aloud, structure as you go. Composure is the actual test.
- Deliberate stress tactics: stay even, answer the substance, don't take the bait.
- The question you can't answer: honesty plus approach — "I haven't met that yet; here's how I'd work it out."

Questions to ask the interviewer

- What does success in this role look like at six and twelve months?
- What are the team's biggest priorities right now?
- How would you describe the team culture — and what kind of person thrives here?
- What do you enjoy most about working here?
- What are the next steps in the process?
